Key Discussion Points

Point	Description
1	The TA recommended the team to have more than six user stories to enrich the project's scope and functionality.
2	It was determined that epics would not be made within the scope of our project.
3	The team agreed that the number of commits should be balanced when nearing the end of the project to ensure equitable contribution.
4	Subtasks should include references to the corresponding user story in their titles (e.g., "Subtask of User Story #X").
5	The syntax provided by the teacher for user stories must be strictly enforced.
6	Acceptance criteria for user stories should be contextual and not strictly related to continuous integration or continuous feedback.
7	Referencing operations related to other user stories is acceptable, particularly on an implementation level, without needing to analyze dependencies.
8	Activities completed during the first sprint will require logged hours.
9	It was decided to have a Sprint 1 folder containing all necessary documents for the sprint, including meeting minutes and an activity log detailing time spent by each member on each activity.

Point	Description
10	Subissues do not require elaborate descriptions; they only need to be created and linked to the corresponding user story.
